. The next day they were arrested when they had a shootout with the police. They were sentenced to 15 years in a maximum security prison. Glen's arrest also sparked international outrage. What did this achieve? "We've put the ball in their court," says Wayne Yapp, a campaigner for the NSPCC. "Canada hasn't so much as said they'll prosecute. With the passage of time it could be well over five years before the case is heard and they have to bear in mind the time they've been in jail." A Canadian lawyer has told Radio 4's Witness programme that Ottawa might have an acceptable legal case to try those involved in the plane hijacking - but the Americans might have strong counter-arguments. The Canadians The two Canadians arrested over the hijacking are Jeffrey Ramcooie and Kenneth Emslie. Mr Ramcooie is a mechanic and flight instructor who was arrested at his home in British Columbia and has pleaded not guilty to charges of conspiracy and being a member of an unlawful assembly. Kenneth Emslie is a wheat farmer who was arrested in his home town of Saskatoon and has made no comment. The Americans The two Americans arrested over the hijacking were Richard Reid, the shoe bomber, and Omar Abdul-Rahman, a radical Muslim preacher. They've been convicted of plotting to blow up a transatlantic jetliner in mid-flight. The pair are currently serving their sentences in US prison. Meanwhile, Suleiman Abdullah Salim is now awaiting trial. Despite a number of attempts to extradite him to the US, he remains in Britain. The Canadian government's offer of a visa to Mr Reid is seen by some people as a way of buying him off. What has been his reaction? "I wonder what impact today's decisions will have on freedom of travel and international security," he tells the BBC World Service, adding that he feared that it could encourage people to try and travel internationally. It's a view echoed by Mr Yapp. "You can't arrest people for getting on a plane. I understand there's a degree of panic - you have to account for people who are going overseas and come back as completely changed people." Mr Reid and Mr Abdul-Rahman are due to be released from prison in October 2003. Suleiman Abdullah Salim is still awaiting extradition to

"Catching Fire" begins with Katniss and Peeta, the two victors of the 74th Hunger Games, as they live through the days leading up to the 75th Hunger Games (another reason to stop watching "The Office"), fighting for the Games to open on schedule as they await to see who will marry Prim, the Capitol's choice. A lot of people ask me whether Katniss and Peeta were my inspiration. I always answer that my character is Suzanne Collins' character, but Katniss and Peeta are a fictional version of Suzanne Collins. They're not me. There's a lot of talk about whether Katniss has any "real" friends. I can't say too much because, like Suzanne's Katniss, I'm an anon. I don't share my real identity online. I don't talk to random strangers. I haven't had a one-on-one conversation with anyone since the middle of my senior year in high school. This makes me kind of lonely; I don't know how to relate to people I haven't met. When I'm writing, I go to cafés or friends' houses.
