Capillary electrophoresis (CE) was combined with contactless conductivity detection (C(4)D) for the simultaneous determination of three hygroscopic polymers, i.e. hydroxyethyl cellulose (HEC), hydroxypropyl cellulose (HPC) and (poly)ethylene glycol 6000 (PEG 6000), in complex samples of natural and synthetic microparticles. In addition, PEG 4000 and PEG 12000 were applied for a semiquantitative determination of soluble polymers in pharmaceutical preparations. HEC was the only polymeric substance found in both materials. The sample was loaded into the capillary without any prior derivatization or other sample preparation steps and separation was carried out by means of the uncoated capillary and 40 mM borate buffer (pH 9.4). For the natural microparticles, average values for HEC were found to be 0.28 mg/g in dried beech pollen, 0.08 mg/g in cocoa husks and 0.12 mg/g in cashew nut shells. For the synthetic microparticles, the amount of HEC was found to be 0.33
