Quintuple World Champion Lewis Hamilton set the fastest lap at the final pre-season test before the 2018 Formula 1 season starts in Australia on March 17. Hamilton posted the fastest time - 1m 41.544s - at the second of the four-day test in Barcelona in what's expected to be hot weather on the streets of Spain's seaside circuit. It's his fastest lap in five pre-season tests, and puts him level with Sebastian Vettel, who set the fastest time in the first pre-season test in Australia in 2014. It also puts Hamilton ahead of Valtteri Bottas, who had the fastest time in the opening test session in Australia. Hamilton's fastest time in the final Barcelona test is expected to cause some excitement among his rivals, with Vettel admitted to be surprised at Hamilton's pace when they last faced off in Monaco on the eve of the 2017 season. "I think it's a bit of a pity that we didn't see the others over the same time as the Mercedes," the German said. "I was just amazed how quick Lewis was on the straights and on the back straight, where it's always been a bit of a weakness for him. "But he's strong and the fact that he's still so competitive is good for the sport, I think. "We're just going to have to wait and see how he is when the season starts, but I don't think it will change anything for us." With almost a month to go until the start of the season, the new turbo V6 engines and their new, higher-performing close-ratio gearboxes, which take up the top gear (14th) of the 18-cylinder,
