Washington (CNN) -- Newly released FBI documents containing information on the US government's actions on September 11, 2001, show the CIA was warned that Osama bin Laden was planning an attack, and that the FBI had a source close to bin Laden. The documents also show that the CIA was monitoring phone conversations between al Qaeda members, including bin Laden. The CIA "believes" the calls were made to discuss possible attacks, according to a senior intelligence official, but had no specific information to implicate bin Laden. The CIA's ability to intercept communications is limited because of technological restrictions and even more because of safeguards in place to prevent classified or sensitive intelligence from being revealed. The FBI had a significant lead on bin Laden's contacts and activities, intelligence officials said. Bin Laden was a known associate of one of the key September 11 hijackers, Khalid Almihdhar, and the FBI had a double agent who was providing information on Almihdhar and two others. Alleged Saudi support for al Qaeda In one of the documents, the CIA says it was aware of an investigation by Saudi intelligence that the Saudi ambassador to the United States -- Prince Bandar bin Sultan -- "possesses information about bin Laden's activities in Afghanistan and the possibility of attacks on US facilities in Saudi Arabia." The documents show that the CIA was particularly concerned about Prince Bandar's information, because Saudi officials had previously warned the agency of a possible bin Laden attack in Saudi Arabia. A number of terror plots were prevented by information provided by the Saudi ambassador to the United States, Henry Crumpton, according to intelligence sources. Prior knowledge of Saudi support for al Qaeda The CIA says the Saudi support for al Qaeda is one of the "recent US intelligence reporting priorities" and says the CIA's ability to learn about this information had improved since July 2001. The CIA learned about the information "from an open source database and intercepts of communications with an individual inside Saudi Arabia," according to the documents. The FBI, however, has not found a Saudi double agent, and that there was no specific intelligence on bin Laden's contacts with the Saudi ambassador. Bin Laden had tried to solicit help from the Saudi Embassy in Germany in the months leading up to September 11, according to the documents, and Saudi officials refused to meet with the terrorist leader. "Bin Laden told the German detainee that he had expressed a desire for financial support to the Saudi Embassy
