Text files that we needed to work with in VB6.[Diastolic dysfunction in acute coronary syndrome: what do we know about pathogenesis, clinical importance, diagnosis, and therapy?]. A number of studies have been performed in order to assess the relationship between diastolic dysfunction and prognosis in patients with acute coronary syndromes and the result is mostly contradictory. A systematic review and meta-analysis of the current literature (updated to January 2016) were performed. Additionally, diagnostic aspects are discussed. We identified 21 articles for the analysis. The prevalence of diastolic dysfunction (DD) in patients with acute coronary syndrome (ACS) was 28% in the meta-analysis and 14% in the individual included studies. In the meta-analysis the presence of DD is associated with adverse outcome. If the minimum follow-up was three months, however, the association is lost. Diagnosis of DD is feasible. Several studies have demonstrated that mid-range transmitral E/E' and E/E' is the most reliable method. Sensitivity and specificity were found to be 77.0% and 88.6%. The diagnosis can be established with a good inter-observer agreement. There are several treatment options. The most effective is improvement of heart failure. Beta blockers are useful in decreasing mortality. Diuretics and spironolactone are not associated with increased mortality, but in patients with heart failure improvement of NYHA class can be achieved. Improvement of DD by beta blockers in patients with ACS has not been shown so far. In cases of persistent DD, treatment has to be individualized. An improvement of diastolic dysfunction may improve prognosis in patients with ACS. However, evidence of such an association is only provided by meta-analyses. Individual decision-making has to be taken. As DD is associated with worse prognosis, the demonstration of the reversibility of DD or its influence on therapy is mandatory. In recent years, it has become popular to form
